Professionals who work with alcoholics share a common purpose with A.A.: To help the alcoholic stop drinking. A.A. members are available to provide A.A. meetings or information about A.A. upon request.

Approximately two million alcoholics have achieved sobriety in A.A., but members recognize that their program is not always effective with all alcoholics. Some may also require professional counseling or medical treatment.

A.A. is concerned solely with the personal recovery and continued sobriety of individual alcoholics. A.A. doesn't make medical diagnoses, engage in research, or keep records or case histories of members

A.A. has adopted a policy of cooperation but not affiliation with other organizations concerned with the problem of alcoholism.
